JOB SATISFACTION OF THE EMPLOYEES

JOB SATISFICATION IN A CORPORATE ENVIRONMENT

According to a survey conducted in early 2018, only 20 percent of the employees in India were satisfied and content with their respective job roles. That leaves us with flabbergasting 80 percent of the corporate employees, unhappy and dissatisfied with their job roles in the country.

It is a well-known fact that happy workers are one of the important assets of a business. While there is no exact formula for keeping your employees happy, we can always have innovative concepts that will support their happiness. In many industries, especially in IT and healthcare, the individuals are more likely to be stressed and pressured to do their best, specially under the direst situation. Even when we take into the account that it is important to get the work done, it is also equally important to consider each individuals capacity and their priorities.

JOB SATISFICATION IN AN IT SECTOR

Information Technology is one of the fastest growing sectors across the globe, and there is no stopping to its growth. While we acknowledge its rapid rise in today's economy, we forget to acknowledge those who worked for it to reach this height. It is not a new fact that employees who work in IT sectors, regardless of their job roles are stressed and struggle with their work-life balance. It is vital that regardless of which field they work in, the individuals of the company need to have a balanced work-life quotient.

JOB SATISFICATION IN AN IT SECTOR

While it is hard to reduce the workload on the employees, there are tactics that can help them stay happy and help them release their 'happy hormone' which will directly impact their productiveness at work.

- ▽ Build a good relationship with the co-workers: This helps them have an open mind and speak their mind out without the fear of being left out or being rejected.
- ▽ Benefits and overall Package: One of the biggest motivation at work has always been – money. Offering an overall package with benefits will keep them on their toes and happy.
- ▽ Paid off time: They work, they execute and contribute to the success of your company. They need time off from work and get paid at the same time.
- ▽ Defined benefit and pension plan: To get a clear idea of their future.

While these suggestions are considerably impactful, there are many other ways that we can work towards to make life of these hard-working individuals, easier and happier. Here is a case study on job satisfaction levels of the employees in a corporate world.

STUDY BACKGROUND

The client wanted to conduct an internal survey amongst their employees to understand their satisfaction levels concerning their job roles.

BUSINESS OBJECTIVE

To understand the level of satisfaction amongst their staff members, Board members, Advisors, External Stakeholders and Board of Directors

OPERATIONAL CHALLENGES

We programmed and hosted the survey within our platform and delivered the URLs to the client which helped them in sending the e-mails to their internal employees. Initially, the participation was low from the employees due to various reasons.

OUR APPROACH TO OPERATIONAL CHALLENGES

We generated more URLs and submitted to the client along with multiple reminders which in turn helped out to be very useful in gaining the participation.
